Native Student Success

10 grantees receive $487,600 in support!

Some of the younger students at Hearts Gathered (Omak, WA).

Now in its fourth year, Native Student Success continues to support Tribes and Native nonprofit organizations providing culturally relevant programs that improve the quality and/or alignment of early learning and early elementary education for children 0-8 and engage parents, families, and elders in a way that leads to increased support of their children's education.

This year's grantees are encouraging organizational learning and building capacity and are interested in the development, implementation, and sharing of "best" or "highly effective" practices in achieving success for their students on multiple levels.

Funding for these grants was graciously provided by the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation. Visit the Potlatch Fund website to learn more about the 2015 grantees.

The Burke Museum of Natural History provided a lovely space and for those interested a brief tour of the exhibit Here & Now: Native Artists Inspired. The exhibition celebrates the 10th anniversary of the Bill Holm Center for the Study of Northwest Native Art, a global learning center that supports access to the Burke Museum's Native art and artifact collections through research grants, programs, and publications.

Thank you very much to all those who attended, the Burke Museum staff, and our co-host Sealaska Corporation.
